As Canadians are found to be suffering from different kinds of wounds, there has been an increase in the risk of infection and associated complications. Therefore, the use of wound dressings is to protect the wound and provide an optimal environment for wound repair. With traditional wound healing, dressings have substantially changed the wound outcome. Complications associated with surgical and chronic wounds are still a challenge to healthcare. Advancements in tissue engineering, biomaterial sciences, and stem cell biology have led to the development of novel dressings that not only dress the wounds but also actively contribute to the process of healing. With the advanced wound dressing has shown very significant results in diabetic patients as well in chronic wounds that take a long time or cannot be healed by traditional wound dressings. It revolves around the principle of moisture therapy, which provides moisture to the wound site to encourage natural cell repair while giving the wound, room to breathe. Products utilized in moist wound care generally fit better around different wound shapes and sizes and are more resistant to environmental inhibitors and foreign particles. Advanced wound dressing involves film dressings are intended to adhere firmly to the skin surrounding a wound without sticking to the wound itself. This creates a moist environment and helps to avoid necrosis. Seaweed-derived alginate dressings come in a variety of shapes to cover wounds and trap bacteria, which can be removed during dressing changes.
